

Brian T. Must

Brian is the chairman of the Commercial Litigation Group and oversees the firm's litigation practice. Brian's focus is trying cases. His own practice concerns a wide variety of commercial disputes, including breach of contract, breach of warranty, shareholder actions, directors and officers claims, corporate and successor liability cases, and employment disputes. Brian also has over 25 years of experience in representing manufacturers and designers in all aspects of commercial roofing disputes. Whether jury trials, injunctions, or arbitrations, Brian's practice is focused on the trial aspect of litigation.

Brian thoroughly enjoys trial work and obtaining favorable results for the firm's clients. Brian also serves an active role on the firm's management team. As a founding member at Metz Lewis, he strives to maintain a culture of professionalism and dedication to client service.

In addition to his wife and three sons' activities, Brian spends his free time as a runner and serving the local chapter of Young Life, a non-denominational Christian organization for adolescents.
